

Students confront global warming

The first national youth summit to discuss global warming took place Friday in Washington D.C. Power Shift 2007 was a national conference with thousands of college students.

The three main goals of the summit were to make U.S. congressmen and presidential candidates take global warming seriously, empower a network of diverse young leaders and achieve broad geographic diversity.

Grand Valley State University was represented at the 2007 Power Shift by members of the Student Environmental Coalition.