

Recent snowstorm takes Michigan by surprise
12-9-09

Local resident Hugh Miser was watering his lawn last Thursday afternoon, and was about to go inside and sit down for dinner. “It was a beautiful day,” said Miser. “It was one of the best Thursdays I’ve seen in weeks.”

This was four hours before the storm hit.

Starting at roughly 7:00 pm, a storm of mediocre proportions swept across the state, like nothing Michigan residents had not seen before.

Weather experts have named this storm “Snow,” which was next in the storm-naming alphabet, after “Rain” and “Queen’s Newest Album,” both incredibly destructive in their own rights, killing none and causing several dollars in damage.

Unfortunately, there was no time for evacuation of the state, and by the time the storm was over, the residents were all but barricaded in their warm homes, sipping hot cocoa and watching Tim Allen movies. All of us here cannot even begin to imagine the horrors of having food and shelter.

Since the Snow storm started on Thursday, the internet has been in a frenzy, with Facebook statuses updating almost hourly with new complaints about the crisis. These statuses include “wtf its snowing,” “I hate snow” and the simple and all-capitalized “SNOW.” These anonymous grievors are just a few of the many affected by Snow’s destructive force.

While the president has not officially commented on the situation yet, sources inside the White House say that President Obama is praying for anyone who has lost their car in the snowbanks of this horrific happening.

According to one local resident, he has seen as many as four or five empty cars in the median of the highway he uses to get to work. God only knows where the motorists of these abandoned cars have perished to.

He added, “It’s cold outside.”

This is just one of the many complaints from Michigan residents since the storm began. They are asking for anything from “dry socks to Christmas decorations to the ability for our cars to warm up quicker. I mean really, it’s the 21st century. You’d think our cars would heat up faster by now.”

One student at a local university is even asking for the Charlie Brown Christmas special on DVD. The address that you can send this charitable donation will be available after this news.

Citizens have been urged to close their windows, lock their doors, and wait for the storm to pass. Meteorologists speculate that Snow will last at least another four months. According to Stan Thunder, a local weatherman, people should have expected this monstrosity a lot sooner. “The warning signs were all there; it was nearing the end of the year, the temperature was getting colder.”

He added, “I guess people won’t have to dream for a white Christmas since it’s already here.”

While some people may be able to laugh about this, our thoughts and prayers are with the brave people of Michigan.
